The Pull and Push

An unseen force, a magic might,
Can push or pull with all its might.
It's strongest at the ends, the poles,
A power that connects or rolls.

One end is North, the other South, you see,
Opposite poles attract with glee.
They stick together, tight and strong,
Where they belong, all day long.

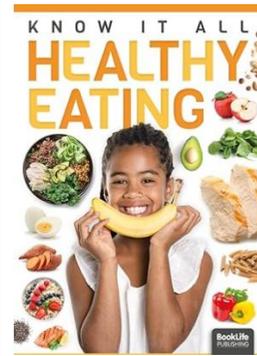

But bring two Norths, or Souths, too near,
They push away, that much is clear.
They'll leap apart, no bond to form,
A tiny, invisible, magnetic storm.

Cobalt, iron, nickel—metals they draw in, —
From paper and plastic, they get no win.
Magnets are cool, a simple fact,
An invisible force in every act.
